Author's Purpose

Recycling is very important. But did you know that you can help the planet even more by choosing different packaging? Many plastic recyclable containers, like the ones that laundry detergent and milk come in, could be recycled. But many local recycling centers don't have the needed equipment to recycle those particular containers. Instead of a giant laundry detergent, consider buying laundry sheets. These take up less space and are lighter, which also means less pollution when they are transported. And instead of buying milk in a plastic jug, try a cardboard container. Many people even think it tastes better!

The Pilgrims sailed on the Mayflower in 1620. 102 passengers left England in September, 1620, and 102 arrived at what is now Massachusetts in November, 1620. One died along the way, and a baby was born: Oceanus. When they landed, the Pilgrims signed a document called the Mayflower Compact. It laid out a plan for how they would be governed. They named the new land Plymouth.

Their first winter in Plymouth was very difficult. Without proper homes, enough food, or the resources they were used to in Europe, half of the Pilgrims died.

In the spring the Pilgrims met two Native Americans, Squanto and Samoset, who helped them trade with the Wampanoag people, taught them how to fertilize the soil, and gave them tips on fishing and foraging the local plants. Thanks to their help, the Pilgrims were prepared for their second winter in Plymouth. To celebrate the end of their harvest, the fifty-three surviving Pilgrims held a great feast and were joined by about ninety of the Wampanoag people and their leader, Massasoit. This became known as the first Thanksgiving.

Jack felt hot and sticky. Between his toes he could feel small grains that bothered his feet. The hair on the back of his neck stuck to his skin. He felt very thirsty. His skin had gotten darker since this morning. He stood up and stretched. His back hurt a little. He put his towel in his bag and helped mom with the umbrella. They walked to the car. Mom told Jack he would have to brush himself off before he got in the car so he wouldn't get it dirty.

Author's Purpose

Benjamin Banneker was a free African American surveyor and farmer. He was born in Baltimore County, Maryland, to a free African-American woman and a former slave. Banneker studied math and natural history, mostly learning on his own. He assisted Major Andrew Ellicott in a survey that drew the original borders of Washington, D.C. when it was being built as the nation's new capital.

Banneker also used his studies in astronomy to write a series of almanacs, books that make weather forecasts. Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Banneker wrote many letters to each other discussing the issues of slavery and equality for free African Americans.

This morning I woke up bright and early. I wanted to make sure I was out of bed before my mom. I snuck downstairs and went into the kitchen. I grabbed a container of orange juice from the fridge. I also got out bread, eggs, and butter. I heated up the frying pan and melted some butter onto it. I broke two eggs into a bowl and mixed them really well. I added a dash of salt and pepper. Then, I scrambled the eggs. I toasted two pieces of bread and put butter on them. I placed all the food on a nice tray with a red rose. I snuck upstairs to my mom's room just as she was waking up.
